ABOUT ME

I am in my third year of a Bachelor of Liberal Arts and Sciences, majoring in Governance. With a strong interest in investigative journalism, I aim to bridge my background in political analysis with the vital role of media in shaping political discourse. My academic work has equipped me with strong research and analytical skills, covering areas such as political sciences, gender studies, international relations, philosophy, and regional studies, with a particular focus on the Global South. I am passionate about the role of communication in defining socio-political realities, which I have developed through further coursework.

Additionally, as a Chilean student in Germany and Spain, I have developed adaptability skills and a global perspective, which I aim to apply in advocacy campaigns and journalistic work.
