Case Analysis: ONGC v/s Saw Pipes Ltd. \(2003\): Arbitration, Liquidated Damages, and Public Policy

↗

Nov 2024

The Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996, grants the court the power to set aside an arbitral award. The tribunal was mandated under Section 28 to decide disputes in accordance with substantive law in India. The court ruled that the tribunal's decision violated the Indian Contract Act, 1872, as it failed to consider Sections 73 and 74 of the Act and the ratio laid down in Fateh Chand v. Balkishan Das.

Section 73 allows the party who suffers from a breach to receive compensation for any loss caused to them that the parties knew when they made the contract to be likely to result from the breach. Section 74 deals with penalties stipulated in the contract, and the party is only entitled to reasonable compensation for the loss suffered. However, if the compensation is the genuine pre-estimated loss, there is no question of proving the actual loss or the party is not required to lead evidence to prove the actual loss suffered.
