CAREER OBJECTIVE

I'm currently in my second semester of undergraduate law at Amity University, where I explore the ever-evolving landscape of law, policy, and advocacy. With a deep interest in political science and governance, I analyze how legal frameworks shape societies and drive systemic change.

Beyond academics, I find my strength in public speaking, debating, and Model UNs—where words are more than just arguments; they are tools for persuasion, diplomacy, and impact. Whether it's navigating a high-stakes debate or leading discussions on global issues, I bring strategy, confidence, and a passion for meaningful dialogue.

With strong research and writing skills, I'm committed to social justice and public interest work, seeking an internship opportunity at an NGO to gain hands-on experience in legal aid, policy advocacy, and grassroots impact.

For me, advocacy isn't just about laws—it's about making voices heard and driving change where it matters. Passionate about leveraging legal knowledge and communication skills to support social justice initiatives and community-based advocacy through volunteering.
