Motivation Statement

Internships related to Human Rights or Human Rights Commission, are deeply aligned with both my present work and future goals; including my pursuit of an LLM in Human Rights. More than a line on my CV, it's a space where I hope to understand how justice functions on the ground, especially within the systems that claim to protect it. I'm currently working on a research paper about the indoctrination within academic institutions; how one-sided narratives often narrow young minds instead of liberating them.

Alongside that, I've also begun building Maroon Insaaf; a global human rights forum to bring unheard voices to light. It's still in an early stage, but the vision is strong: from neighbourhood-level domestic abuse to global refugee crises, I want to listen, document, and remind the world that every human deserves to be heard. Human rights, for me, is not just a subject; it's a beat I follow wherever it's silenced. This internship isn't just an opportunity, but a place where my questions, ideas, and emotional investment in justice can grow meaningfully.
