

1. ABOUT THE TRAINEE:

I, Payal Das, a fourth-semester student pursuing a Master of Social Work (MSW) from the Department of Social Work, Assam University, Silchar. As part of the academic curriculum and my journey toward becoming a socially responsible and skilled professional, I undertook a 45-day block placement at Child Rights and You (CRY), Kolkata. The trainee worked under the supervision of Ms. Rubina Haque Laskar (Associate- Volunteer Engagement). This placement offered me an invaluable opportunity to move beyond classroom learning and immerse myself in the practical realities of social work. With a keen interest in child rights, community engagement, and development practice, I approached this placement with a sense of responsibility, openness, and a deep desire to learn from the field, the people, and the seasoned professionals working tirelessly to bring meaningful change.

This report summarises my overall experience during the placement, highlighting the key learnings, observations, and the nature of work I was involved in. It reflects not only the tasks undertaken but also the personal and professional growth I experienced throughout this enriching journey.

2. ABOUT THE ORGANIZATION:

Child Rights & You (CRY) is a non-governmental organization (NGO) in India that is working to promote the rights of the children in four key areas: education, health and nutrition, safety and protection & child participation. Children are one among the most vulnerable groups in our society who are easily affected and thus they are at risk groups. Various issues can be seen such as child labour, child trafficking, child marriage, and other forms of child abuse etc. CRY, being one of the top NGOs working in the sectors of children works in collaboration with the parents, schools, community members, volunteers, interns, community resource persons, local-self-governments and most importantly with the children in order to improve and transform their lives. The goal is to support the healthy and holistic development of the children for getting empowered and to envision the change in long run.

The main office of CRY is located in Mumbai, but it operates through regional offices in different parts of India. One of the key regional branches is in Kolkata, which looks after projects and programs in eastern and northeastern states. The Kolkata office is located at 13, Regent Estate, Kolkata – 700092, West Bengal. For any communication, it can be contacted through the phone number +91-33-2412-0059 or by email at kolkata@crymail.org.

During my block placement at the Kolkata office, I got the opportunity to observe how the team works closely with communities and partner organizations. The staff members were not only committed and experienced but also very welcoming and supportive, which made the learning experience meaningful and inspiring for me.

3. HISTORY OF THE ORGANIZATION:

CRY, (Child Rights and You), well known organization, was founded in 1979 by Rippan Kapur, who was then a young purser with Indian Airlines. With an amount of just Rs. 50 in hand and the support of six close friends of him, he initiated CRY with a simple yet life changing vision- that every child in India deserve and thus should have a happy and healthy childhood.

The Beginnings: During the initial phases, CRY focused mainly on helping children in need through welfare and support measures. The aim was to bring some joy and security into the lives of children who were being denied basic rights like education, health, and protection.

Evolution over Time: With time, CRY evolved- not just in size, but also in its approach. It moved beyond welfare and started working on long-term solutions. CRY began to focus on children's rights, working closely with communities, families, and local organizations to bring sustainable changes. It has now become one of India's most respected child rights organisations, reaching out to lakhs of children across the country.

Significant Accomplishments:

1. Voice of India Campaign: CRY played pivotal role in the 'Voice of India' campaign, which promoted free and compulsory education for all children. This movement helped to mould the Right to Education Act passed in 2009.
2. Global Participation: CRY takes part in international forums like Girls Not Brides and NACG-EVAC (National Action and Coordination Group for Ending Violence Against Children), where it collaborates with others to raise voice for children everywhere.
3. Work at the Grassroot Level: CRY strongly posits that real and sustainable change begins in the community. It collaborates with grassroot level NGOs and works closely with families to fight against social issues like child labour, child marriage, lack of schools, and poor healthcare etc.

4. INSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIVES:

- VISION of CRY

- a) Happy, Healthy and Creative Childhoods: Ensuring that every child has access to the basic needs- nutritious food, proper healthcare, educational opportunities, opportunities for recreation and thus to grow with full potential.
- b) Fulfilment of Child Rights: Promoting fundamental rights of children, to survive, develop, be protected, to participate in decisions affecting them, to protect the best interest of children.
- c) A Just and Equal Society: CRY aims to build a world where every child, regardless of caste, class, gender, or background, is valued and treated with fairness, dignity, and love.

- MISSION OF CRY:

- a) Empowering Individuals to Act: CRY encourages people to initiate actions through various means like volunteering, making donations, generating awareness where everyone can make positive changes in children's lives through their own contribution.
- b) Tapping into the Power of Collective Action: CRY believes in collective power where communities can bring about changes when they act collectively.
- c) Securing Children's Rights: CRY not only strives to ensure recognition of child rights but also upholds them to be protected and respected.
- d) Addressing Root Causes: CRY identifies poverty, illiteracy, child marriage, exploitation etc are deeply seated thus it works to address those issues to address children's problems.
- e) Ensuring Lasting Impacts: CRY focuses on sustainable changes- to build a strong and resilient communities where children and families can thrive well.

- AIM OF CRY:

The organization has key goals focused on ensuring children's rights to education, healthcare, safety, and participation. They aim to improve access to quality education and healthcare, prevent child labour and child marriage, empower girls, and create a safer future for all children. CRY also works towards reducing child malnutrition and ensuring children's voices are heard on issues affecting them.

- Registration Details: The registration details for the Kolkata office follow the parent organization's legal framework and were formalized in the early 2000s.

6. TYPES OF WORKS:

CRY Kolkata is actively involved in several meaningful programs that aim to protect and nurture children, especially those from vulnerable and marginalised communities. The work here goes far beyond paperwork or campaigns- it is rooted in real people, real lives, and real change.

The Kolkata regional office focuses on important areas like child protection, education, health and nutrition, and child participation. These programs are carried out in partnership with grassroots organisations across various districts in West Bengal, Jharkhand, Odisha, and parts of Bihar. By working closely with local communities, CRY helps create safer, healthier, and more supportive environments where children can thrive.

A key part of CRY's effort is to build child-friendly communities- places where children are not forced into child labour, early marriage, or human trafficking. Education is given great importance. The team works to ensure that children are enrolled in school, stay in school, and learn in spaces that are not only safe but also welcoming and inclusive.

In terms of health, CRY focuses especially on nutrition for mothers and children, spreading awareness about healthy practices and helping families connect with health services. Regular health drives and campaigns are part of their strategy to improve the overall well-being of children and their families.

There is also special attention given to empowering adolescent girls and children from tribal and marginalised communities, who often face multiple layers of discrimination and hardship. Through community meetings, awareness programs, and supportive networks, CRY helps these young individuals find their voice and build confidence.

In every program, the heart of CRY's approach lies in listening to children, involving them in decisions, and ensuring their rights are not only protected but respected. During my time at the Kolkata office, I could see how each effort- no matter how big or small- was centred around hope, dignity, and the belief that every child deserves a fair chance.

7. FUNDING SOURCES:

CRY Kolkata's work is made possible through the generous support of individual donors, corporate partnerships, and international funding agencies. Key contributors include organisations like HDFC, ITC, and the Cognizant Foundation, along with several individual donors. The organisation also runs annual fundraising campaigns and receives valuable support from philanthropic institutions and grant-making bodies, both within India and internationally. This collective support helps CRY continue its mission to create lasting change in children's lives.

8. NUMBER AND TARGET GROUPS OF BENEFICIARIES:

CRY, Kolkata works for the well-being of children between the ages of 0 to 18 years, with a strong focus on those growing up in vulnerable conditions. This includes children from urban slums, rural poverty-stricken areas, and marginalised communities such as Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, and other backward groups.

Every year, CRY Kolkata- through its network of partner organisations- reaches over 25,000 children across Kolkata and nearby districts. These children benefit from support in education, healthcare, nutrition, and protection from exploitation and abuse. The goal is to ensure that every child, no matter their background, has the opportunity to grow up safe, healthy, and hopeful for a better future. Following are the key areas of CRY's intervention:

Children aged 0-18: CRY's work encompasses a broad spectrum of child rights, including health, education, and protection from various forms of exploitation.

Children under 5: CRY focuses on preventing undernourishment and ensuring access to healthcare services.

Children aged 6-18: CRY works to ensure school enrolment and retention, particularly for the 15-18 age group, where they have seen better results than the all-India average.

Adolescent girls: CRY works to protect adolescent girls from child marriage.

Children at risk of child labour: CRY strives to protect children from child labor and trafficking.

10. INFRASTRUCTURE FACILITIES:

The CRY Kolkata office is well set up to meet its day-to-day needs. It has proper administrative workspaces, meeting rooms, and a resource centre filled with books and reports on child rights and development. The office is digitally connected, with access to the internet, computers, printers, and project management tools.

Although CRY Kolkata does not have its own training halls or transport vehicles, it collaborates with local schools and community centres to hold outreach programs and awareness events. Staff and interns are supported with digital tools and are also given help with travel expenses for field visits.

11. SUCCESS STORY:

1. Fighting for Her Dreams

Rupali is a cheerful 13-year-old girl living in an urban slum near the Kolkata Port Trust area. She lives in a small one-room hut made of plastic and bamboo with her parents and four siblings. Her family struggles with poverty- her mother works as a domestic help and earns just around ₹2500 per month, while her father is bedridden after an accident. Most days, the family can only afford one meal.

Children in her area often grow up facing harsh realities like abuse, violence, and lack of opportunities. To give these children a better life, CRY started a program called ‘Sports for Change’, which introduced activities like Karate to help build confidence and life skills.

Rupali joined the Karate classes with encouragement from her father. Very soon, she discovered her talent and passion for the sport. Within just six months, she began winning local competitions. Despite facing criticism from neighbours for wearing shorts or having short hair, she remained strong and focused.

Karate gave Rupali the strength to stand up for herself and her friends. Once, she even confronted a group of older boys who were bullying them. She says she wants to use her skills only to protect others and fight injustice.

Though she trains on an empty stomach many days due to food scarcity, CRY is now helping raise support to meet her nutrition needs. Her dedication has already led her to great achievements- she won a gold medal at the 6th International Karate Championship in 2022, and recently at the 9th West Bengal State Wushu Championship, which earned her a place in the Khelo India National Championship.

Rupali now holds a green belt and is training hard to reach the black belt. Her dream is to win a gold medal for India at the Olympics and to become a Karate coach for underprivileged girls, just like her. Her journey is still ongoing, but her courage and positive spirit show that she is ready to take on the world.

2. From Vulnerability to Safety - Rescuing Children from Trafficking through Awareness

In July 2025, a major rescue operation in West Bengal saved over 90 young girls and women from human trafficking. Many were stopped at railway stations- common locations used by traffickers. This rescue was not a coincidence. It was the result of years of awareness work by civil society groups, including CRY Kolkata and its local partners, in high-risk areas.

CRY had been running regular awareness drives in communities, training frontline workers, and conducting sensitization programs in schools. These efforts helped people identify warning signs and act before harm could happen. In one case, a trained field worker spotted suspicious activity involving a young girl at a railway station. Because of the earlier CRY training, the Railway Protection Force (RPF) took immediate action and rescued her just in time.

This story shows how awareness, timely action, and community strength can protect children. CRY doesn't work alone- it builds strong networks with families, local authorities, and children to prevent trafficking before it starts.

12. LIMITATIONS FACED:

However, the organization also encounters certain challenges. A key issue is the strong social stigma and resistance to changing traditional mindsets in some rural communities. Even with ongoing awareness efforts, problems like child labour and school dropouts persist- mainly because of poverty and poor infrastructure. Additionally, the organization's reliance on donor funding can limit program flexibility, as some grants come with specific conditions that must be followed.

13. 1FUTURE PLAN:

Over the next 2 to 5 years, CRY Kolkata aims to deepen its grassroots impact by collaborating with more local NGOs, especially in remote and underserved regions. The organization plans to place greater emphasis on adolescent health and promote digital learning among rural children. It also envisions setting up urban child rights watch groups in partnership with municipal authorities to track and report child protection issues. Additionally, CRY plans to engage more closely with local governments to support effective policy implementation and improve resource allocation for children's well-being. Their future strategy also includes building the capacities of community leaders, training youth as child rights advocates, and using technology for real-time progress tracking. It is also aiming to further its volunteer chapters to various other parts of India especially in Barak Valley, in collaboration with the Assam University, Silchar - the Department of Social Work under a joint initiative. This was discussed by the agency supervisor Ms. Rubina Haque Laskar with the trainees during the placement. They want young and dedicated volunteers to contribute to the well-being of the underserved children.

PART II

14. MAJOR WORK DONE BY THE TRAINEE:

As part of 45-day block placement for my social work training, the trainee had the enriching opportunity to work with Child Rights and You (CRY), Kolkata- a well-known organization committed to protecting and promoting the rights of underprivileged children across India. The placement was not just a learning experience, but also a journey into the real-world challenges and resilience of children and communities.

1. Orientation and Introduction to CRY's Work

The placement began with a detailed orientation session carried out by Ms. Rubina Haque, Associate- Volunteer Engagement, where the trainee was introduced to CRY's mission, values, and key areas of work. The session provided a comprehensive understanding of how the organization operates to ensure children's rights to survival, development, protection, and participation. The trainee learned about CRY's partnerships with grassroots NGOs and its collaborative work across various sectors, including education, health, and child protection.

The orientation also shed light on CRY's organizational structure and the roles played by its program, communication, and fundraising teams. This foundation helped the trainee understand how different departments work together to support long-term change in the lives of children.

This induction session also included the delegation of the assignment to the trainees according to their expectations, and interests. Here, the trainee was assigned with the task of documentation of CRY's community engagement which is termed as Public Action Group (PAG), Rajabazar, Kolkata.

2. Visiting Urban Slums Where PAGs Are Being Run:

As part of the fieldwork component, the trainee visited several urban slum communities in and around Kolkata where Public Action Groups (PAGs) are actively working. These areas are typically marked by high population density, poverty, lack of basic infrastructure, and limited access to quality education and health services. The trainee visited the Rajabazar PAG located at Narkeldanga, Kolkata.

PAGs, formed with the support of CRY and its grassroots partners, act as community-based support systems that advocate for children's rights at the local level. They consist of local residents- including parents, youth, and volunteers- who are trained to identify issues affecting children, such as school dropouts, child labour, or abuse, and raise collective voices to address them.

During these visits, the trainee observed the active role of PAGs in engaging with families, connecting with school authorities, and spreading awareness about the Right to Education (RTE). These observations helped the trainee understand how community ownership is critical to sustaining long-term change, especially in vulnerable urban settings.

3. Initial Observations and Expectations:

At the beginning of the placement, the trainee stepped into an urban slum area for the very first time. The environment was overwhelming- narrow lanes, densely packed homes, poor sanitation, and a visible lack of basic amenities. The trainee felt a mix of nervousness and hesitation, unsure of how to approach the community or whether she would be accepted in such a setting.

One key observation was the gap between awareness and access. While many parents wanted to send their children to school, they often lacked the information or support needed to do so. The trainee also noticed that children often faced challenges such as the need to support family income, lack of birth certificates, and poor learning environments.

This ground reality helped shift the trainee's perspective- from a passive observer to an active learner- recognizing the layered social, economic, and emotional barriers these communities face.

There was a natural apprehension about how her presence would be perceived and how effectively she could contribute. Observing the harsh realities of poverty and the daily struggles of families, especially children, made a deep impact. It was a stark contrast to classroom discussions and textbook cases.

However, with each field visit and with the guidance of CRY's field team, the trainee gradually began to adapt. She started to understand the rhythm of community life, the strengths hidden beneath the struggles, and the incredible resilience of the people. The warmth shown by the children and the openness of local volunteers helped the trainee grow more confident and comfortable in the field.

This transition- from initial discomfort to meaningful engagement- was a significant part of the trainee's learning journey. It also reinforced the understanding that social work in the field requires patience, sensitivity, and a willingness to learn from the community itself.

4. Participating in PAGs in Promoting Informal Education of Urban Slum Children:

The trainee was given the opportunity to participate in informal education sessions conducted under the PAG initiative. These sessions were usually held in community spaces or open areas and were aimed at bridging learning gaps for children who were either out of school or struggling academically.

The trainee's involvement included:

- Helping facilitate learning activities, such as reading sessions, storytelling, drawing, and basic numeracy exercises.
- Supporting volunteer educators in creating a child-friendly learning environment.
- Encouraging children's participation through games, songs, and interactive discussions on everyday topics like hygiene, safety, and kindness.

- Observing the progress of children over a few sessions and maintaining informal notes on attendance and engagement levels.
- Observing various important events with children like the Fathers' Day.

The trainee also had meaningful interactions with parents during and after the sessions, which helped in building rapport and understanding the role of parental motivation in keeping children connected to education.

Through these activities, the trainee gained practical experience in non-formal education methods and saw how learning can be made joyful and relevant, even in resource-limited settings.

15. APPLICATION OF SOCIAL WORK METHODS:

1. SOCIAL GROUP WORK:

Social Group Work is a method of social work that involves engaging small groups of individuals in a purposeful and interactive process to achieve personal growth, social adjustment, and collective development. It uses planned group activities to enhance the functioning of individuals within a group, develop leadership, and promote cooperation and mutual support.

a) During the trainee's placement at CRY Kolkata, the groups involved were:

- Children from urban slum areas who joined informal learning sessions.
- Public Action Group (PAG) members, like parents, local volunteers, and youth, who worked together for child rights.
- Community volunteers (former PAG participants) who helped run education and awareness sessions.

b) Alignment with Group Work as a Method of Social Work Practice:

- The trainee worked with groups of children during informal education sessions. These sessions helped children learn together, speak up, and build confidence.
- PAGs were small groups that met regularly to talk about child rights and find ways to solve problems in the community. They shared ideas and took group action—just like in group work.

- The trainee was part of these activities, which were all about learning, sharing, and helping each other in a group setting.

c) Techniques Used:

- Group discussions
- Storytelling
- Educational games
- Ice-breaking activities
- Listening and observation

d) Observed Outcomes:

- Increased participation of children
- Improved comfort and confidence in group learning
- Peer-to-peer support among children
- Enhanced awareness among PAG members
- Better teamwork and mutual trust
- Stronger community involvement in child rights issues

2. SOCIAL WORK RESEARCH:

Social Work Research is a method used to study social problems, understand needs, and evaluate programs to improve services. It can involve both collecting new data (primary research) and analysing existing data (secondary research).

During the block placement, the trainee was assigned to compile and analyse previously collected data by volunteers and interns. The trainee studied reports, organized the information, identified patterns, and helped prepare a final summary - which clearly reflects the secondary research method.

The participants of the research were the volunteers and interns working in PAGs and the children participating in the PAGs.

Techniques Used (Social Work Research)

- Data sorting and cleaning
- Reviewing previous documentation
- Basic data analysis (e.g., finding patterns/trends)
- Report writing
- Interpreting field observations
- Using observation notes to support findings

Observed Outcomes:

- Organized and structured data on children's issues
- Clear insights into education and child protection challenges
- Better understanding of the impact of CRY's activities
- A compiled report useful for future planning and advocacy
- Improved documentation for CRY's ongoing and future projects

Key Learnings:

- Understood that building trust in vulnerable communities takes time, patience, and cultural sensitivity.
- Learned how children are way more approachable and can learn better in their own natural setting compared to a new setting.
- Learned that informal education can be a powerful tool in bridging learning gaps for marginalized children.
- Experienced firsthand the emotional and ethical challenges of witnessing urban poverty and child neglect.
- Recognized the importance of participatory methods while working with children and community groups.
- Gained insight into how data, when organized and interpreted well, can inform better practice.
- Noted the gap between organizational goals and ground realities, highlighting the need for flexible approaches.
- Observed how social workers must balance empathy with objectivity while working in vulnerable settings.

16. CRITICAL REFLECTION:

The block placement at CRY Kolkata turned out to be much more than a fieldwork assignment - it was a journey of personal growth, learning, and facing real-life social realities. For the trainee, visiting an urban slum for the first time was emotionally intense. The overcrowded lanes, lack of sanitation, and the sight of children playing in unsafe environments left her feeling uneasy at first. But over time, regular interactions with the children and guidance from senior field volunteers helped her feel more grounded and connected to the purpose of the work.

The trainee encountered several challenges that shaped her learning and field experience. One key difficulty was the time constraint during the Public Action Group (PAG) sessions, which typically lasted around two hours. While the sessions were well-structured and impactful, the trainee felt that a bit more time with the children would have allowed for deeper engagement, individual attention, and better understanding of their learning needs. Another significant challenge was managing behavioural issues among the children. Some were distracted, restless, or reluctant to participate, which required the trainee to exercise a great deal of patience, understanding, and creativity to keep the environment encouraging and inclusive. In addition, the trainee faced emotional challenges, especially when witnessing the hardships faced by some children, particularly girls who had to carry out household chores and care for younger siblings before or after attending the PAGs. These experiences, although difficult, highlighted the deeper social issues like poverty and gender inequality, and tested the trainee's emotional strength and professional boundaries.

During the block placement, the trainee faced a difficult ethical situation while working with the girls attending the PAGs (Public Action Groups) in Rajabazar. Many of these young girls were burdened with household chores and caregiving responsibilities, such as taking care of younger siblings, especially when their parents went out for daily wage work.

As a result, their arrival at PAG sessions was often delayed, and even after attending, they struggled to complete their homework or concentrate properly, as their minds remained occupied with responsibilities back home.

The trainee felt strongly that this was not the kind of childhood or learning environment any girl deserves. However, she also recognized that these practices were deeply rooted in poverty, patriarchy, and systemic inequalities. Being in an intern role with limited authority and influence, she found herself unable to raise her voice or intervene directly, which left her with a sense of helplessness.

This became an ethical dilemma for the trainee- knowing what is right from a social work and child rights perspective, but not being in a position to change the situation immediately. The experience was both eye-opening and emotionally challenging, making the trainee reflect deeply on the limitations and complexities of grassroots fieldwork.

Despite these tough moments, the trainee experienced significant personal growth. She became more patient, emotionally aware, and learned to observe without judgment. Professionally, she understood how social work principles like empowerment, ethical practice etc. come alive in the field. The experience helped her feel more confident in her abilities to connect with communities and navigate complex social issues.

17. SKILLS DEVELOPED

- Active listening: especially when children or caregivers shared personal concerns
- Communication: adapting to the language and comfort level of children
- Observation: identifying signs of vulnerability or distress among children
- Documentation & report writing: compiling, organizing, and analysing existing data
- Ethical awareness: managing confidentiality, boundaries, and responsible reporting
- Teamwork: collaborating with CRY staff, volunteers, children and local community members
- Critical thinking: understanding complex social issues
- Cultural sensitivity: respecting the beliefs, habits, and lifestyle of slum communities

18. CONCLUSION:

The 45-day block placement at CRY Kolkata was a deeply enriching experience for the trainee. It gave her the opportunity to understand the real-life challenges faced by children in urban slums and the efforts made to protect their rights through education and community support. From handling group activities to dealing with behavioural issues and ethical dilemmas, each day brought new learnings and helped her grow both personally and professionally. The placement not only strengthened her social work skills like communication, observation, patience, and teamwork but also made her more aware of social realities like poverty and gender inequality. Overall, the experience inspired her to continue working for child rights and social justice with greater commitment and sensitivity.
