

Title of the Report:

On-the-Job Training Experience Report

Name of the Student:

Reetama Ghosh

Department/ Division Where Training took Place:

Human Resource Department and Editorial
Department

Duration of the Training:

15/05/2025- 12/06/2025

Introduction:

As part of the curriculum requirement for my Master's degree, I undertook an On-the-Job Training (OJT) programme at the Child Rights and You (CRY), one of India's leading NGOs committed to ensuring the rights of underprivileged children. This training experience was an extraordinary opportunity that not only enriched my theoretical understanding of development work but also allowed me to participate in meaningful activities that directly impacted lives.

During my training Period I was placed under the guidance of my mentor, Ms Rubina Haque whose support, direction, and motivation were instrumental in making my internship memorable. This report is a comprehensive account of my learning, observations, and contributions made during the internship.

Company Overview:

CRY- Child Rights and You, founded in 1979, is a prominent Indian NGO committed to the holistic development of underprivileged children. The organization works relentlessly to ensure that children have access to fundamental rights such as education, health, protection from abuse and exploitation, and a voice in matters that affect their lives. CRY adopts a collaborative approach by partnering with the grassroots NGO's, communities, and government agencies to create sustainable interventions.

With its headquarters in Mumbai and regional offices across India, CRY has established itself as a catalyst for change, transforming countless lives through advocacy, program implantation, and policy influence. The organization's structure includes departments such as Programmes, Communications, Fundraising, and Human Resources, each contributing to its broader mission of equity and justice for children.

Training Objectives:

The primary goals of my internship at CRY were as follows:

- To gain practical exposure to the internal functioning of a reputed NGO.
- To develop a comprehensive understanding of Human Resource Management within the nonprofit framework.
- To acquire editorial and communication skills by contributing to CRY's content creation and documentation.
- To foster empathy and understanding by participating in direct outreach with children.
- To enhance my academic and professional capabilities through observation, active participation, and reflection.

Training Experience:

- Human Resource Development

- Assisting in shortlisting resumes and preliminary screening of applications for internships and volunteering positions.
- Organizing candidate profiles and maintaining structured databases.
- Supporting onboarding processes for new interns and volunteers.
- Participating in planning internal employee engagement activities.
- Attending Hr meetings where I learned about policies, grievance redressal, performance evaluation and training schedules.

- Editorial Department:

- Editing and proofreading content for newsletters, donor reports, and blog articles.
- Drafting case studies and making presentations.

- Field Volunteering- Teaching Children:

One of the most heartwarming experiences during my internship was a day spent volunteering at one of CRY's partner field sites. I conducted a teaching session for children aged 8-12, focusing on basic English and storytelling. This engagement gave me a powerful sense of purpose and directly connected me with CRY's mission on the ground.

- Skills Developed:

- Analytical Thinking: Screening resumes and evaluating volunteer fit based on organizational needs.
- Communication: Writing and editing reports and newsletters refined my formal communication skills.
- Team Collaboration: Working across departments and with diverse stakeholders enhanced my adaptability and interpersonal abilities.
- Time Management: Meeting deadlines and multitasking in a dynamic nonprofit environment helped me prioritize and organize effectively.
- Empathy & Social Awareness: Field exposure and editorial work on sensitive issues improved my emotional intelligence and ethical understanding.

- Lessons Learned:

- Multidisciplinary Exposure is Crucial: The integration of HR, communication, and social outreach taught me how interconnected NGO functions are.
- Sensitivity in Communication: Language in the development sector must be powerful yet respectful, especially when discussing vulnerable populations.
- Nonprofits Require Professionalism: Despite being mission-driven, NGOs require as much professional discipline and efficiency as corporate sectors.
- Passion Meets Practice: People working in the sector are driven by purpose, and aligning with that purpose enhanced my own motivation and commitment.

- Recommendations:

- It would be beneficial to introduce a formal intern orientation at CRY, covering basic functions and ethical guidelines.
- A mentorship model pairing interns with experienced staff could foster faster integration and deeper learning.
- Offering structured feedback after every major task could further support intern growth.
- Expanding intern opportunities for field visits will enhance their understanding of CRY's direct impact.

- Conclusion:

My internship at CRY was not only academically enriching but also personally transformative. It gave me the opportunity to witness firsthand how organized systems, passionate professionals, and community outreach converge to bring meaningful change. The dual exposure to administrative and editorial tasks prepared me for a career that merges strategic thinking with social impact. I am immensely grateful for the experience and the invaluable mentorship I received.