Introduction

The purpose of this report is to analyse the CRY website in order to understand: the organisation, its work, its messaging and what kind of impression it creates on its audience - based on overall experience, design and information provided. Based on a study of the website, the following data has been gathered.

Overview of the Organisation

CRY is a Non-governmental Organisation founded in 1979 by Rippan Kaur, which began as a small dream and has presence all across the nation (and even worldwide) today. It has a solid presence in the media, while also having received several accolades: but most importantly, it has been hugely successful in providing children with the childhood they truly deserve, and the whole team actively works towards the welfare of more children every single day.

The website's "Why Children" subpage is a huge asset, which outlines the importance of the organisation. Simple visuals, bold numbers, and the omnipresent call-to-action button helps instantly convert a concerned individual into a contributing one.

The presence of research reports, statistics and actual changes brought about by the organisation and contributing patrons increase the trust of each visitor, backing their sentiment with impact and a true will to make an effort.

It also presents ways of involvement in a way which makes them feel extremely valuable to potential contributors, such as the premise of co-branding in corporate partnerships or skill development in volunteering & internships.

Design Analysis

Greeted with the faces of happy children, contrary to what one would expect with a name like CRY, the yellow colour, paint blobs, smiles and hopeful imagery create a positive feel.

The website is easy to navigate with clear menus and sections, a good scrolling experience across each page, a good mix of images, clip art and text, animations where required and data as needed. The bold call-to-action button on the top right definitely, but subtly, reminds the visitor that they can contribute. Content is well researched, well presented and up to date. Each sub page and sub section is easily understandable, and ways to contact the organisation are readily available.

Overall, the colour scheme creates a clear and memorable brand identity, and the visual hierarchy is well established to help improve user experience. Simple sans serif fonts ease readability. It runs smoothly and is interactive at several points which engages the user.

Conclusion

To conclude, CRY's website succeeds in conveying the organisation's mission with empathy, clarity, and trustworthiness. It balances professional presentation with emotional resonance, encourages user participation, and supports its messages with credible data.

Social Media Design Audit

@cry_india

Introduction

Purpose of the audit: To evaluate CRY's Instagram from a design standpoint

Time frame: May 2024 - May 2025 (past 1 year)

Factors considered: Consistency, design language, relevance, brand alignment

- 1. Consistency & Brand Alignment - In terms of overall viewing of the feed, you can regularly spot the regular black and yellow colours. However there is significant clutter in terms of colour and text heaviness, which reduces the impression of a cohesive feed.
- 2. Design Language - There are several great posts which align well with the brand language. The handwritten fonts, doodle style of illustration, and eye-catching logo at several places in regular intervals. The emotional, heartfelt aesthetic aligns with CRY's mission. Again, there is inconsistency within the feed due to some posts being photographs, some having heavy text and some being completely different.

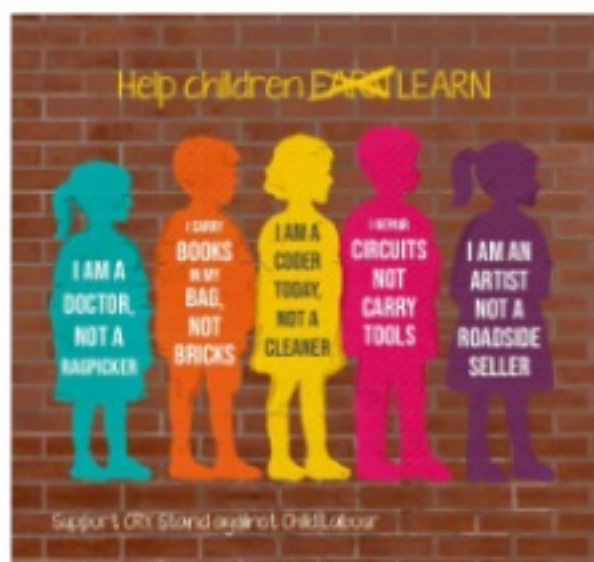

(Sectioning posts, adding a clear balance of photo/illustration/text based posts, and creating a pattern can help manage both these factors)
- 3. Relevance - Regular campaigns like #worlddayagainstchildlabour, #periodfriendlyworld #poorpadhaideshkibhale, keep audiences engaged through their themes and reflect strategic thematic cohesion. Cultural context is also constantly included such as festivals and community presence which increases traction while also having emotional impact.

Overall, CRY's Instagram presence remains warm, authentic, and mission-driven, successfully building awareness and empathy. With a little refinement, it can become even more impactful and visually compelling.
